

"Uncasy Lies the Head That Wears a Crown."

But such are not the only uncasy heads. Overworked, harassed, anxious people of all ages and both sexes are uncasy with aches, pains, impure blood, disordered stomachs, dizziness, nervousness, and fever. For all such, Hood's Sarsaparilla is the effective and faultless cure. It infuses fresh life through purified blood.

SHAPE OF AN ANAESTHETIC.

As Described by an Eminent Specialist. Ist Who Had Used One in an Operation.

It is a Bath physician who tells the following:

"Some time ago I happened to spend the night in a country town not far from Bath and it happened that there was stopping at the same hotel an itinerant eye specialist."

"We drifted into a conversation, and during the course of the evening he told me some of the marvelous operations he had performed on the eye. One case in particular he spoke of that caused me considerable astonishment, for I didn't know, I confess, that the operation had been successfully performed. He said he had recently taken out a patient's eye, scraped the back of it, and returned it to its proper place. The patient, he said, was now, he thought, as good as cured."

"That was a difficult operation, doctor?" said I.

"Yes," said he, "it was."

"I suppose you found it necessary to employ an anaesthetic?"

"Yes, I did," he admitted.

"What anaesthetic did you use, doctor?"

"I used," he said, "a certain gas."

"Oh, well, unless you are familiar with such operations, you probably would not understand if I were to tell you. But, well, it was shaped something like a spoon, explained the eminent specialist."—Lancet (N.Y. Edition).

A MAN OF PRUDENCE.

He Thought a Cyclone Cellar Might Come in Handy When He Was Married.

"Speaking of wives and their dispositions and tendencies," said Mr. Bismuth to the evening crowd in front of his crossroads store, "there was John Bismuth, that lived for ten years in the cyclone belt in Kansas, trying to raise corn and mortgages and things like that, until he was able to borrow money enough to go back to Maryland again without making more than half a cent. When he came back, he found his wife had a job on my farm at $20 a month, for he was a hard worker and thrifty. At the end of the first year he had got the Wilson Allen's promise to marry her in October, and he rented a nice little farm to do business again on his own hook. John was a widower himself, and being a practical man, he had a wife to work right away putting the farm and the house into shape. One day I happened over his way, and found him digging a hole in the back yard."

"What's that for?" said I, walking around and looking over his shoulder.

"That's a cyclone cellar," Mr. Bismuth, says he.

"A cyclone cellar?" said I, considerably surprised. "What do you want a cyclone cellar for? This isn't Kansas."

"I know it isn't," says he, "but you know, Mr. Bismuth, and he got very confidential. 'I'm going to get married, and a cyclone cellar may come in handy handy occasionally.'"—Washington Star.

HIS COURAGE FAILED.

He Was Brave Enough Until He Faced Mrs. Ann, Then He Wilted.

It is the proud boast of Anne Hume that she is a lady descendant of the great Scottish line, and as such, she is a woman of her blood, she prides herself on her courage. For several months she has been in the employ of a servant who has completely terrorized his wife, the latter being the victim and not the commander of her nerves. There was a terrible row between mother and maid last Saturday, and on Monday morning Mrs. Hume sent to her husband:

"Anne, I cannot stand any more of this. Would you please discharge her before you go to business this morning? You know how afraid of her I am."

"Certainly," replied Mr. Hume, with suave courtesy. "The creature that ever attacked a cup of delectable little cannot suit me."

The vaunt Anne had sometimes surprised him and his friends by floating along in a stream of ill-temper. "Proceeding along his hat and cane, he descended to the basement kitchen, and in stentorian tones bellowed at the servant:

"Mary Jane, stand up! Hurry up now, but, Anne!" Mrs. Hume called to tell you that she wants, please, to speak to you after I have gone to the office."—San Francisco Chronicle.

An Excellent Combination.

The pleasant method and beneficial effects of the well known remedy STEAR OF FIGS, manufactured by the CALIFORNIA FIG SYRUP CO. illustrate the value of obtaining the liquid principle of the figs, known to be medicinal, laxative and purgative, and presenting them in the form most refreshing to the taste and acceptable to the system. It is the one perfect strengthening laxative, cleansing the system, effectively dispelling colds, headaches and fevers gently yet promptly and enabling one to overcome habitual constipation permanently. Its perfect freedom from every objectionable quality and substance, and its acting on the kidneys, liver and bowels, without weakening or irritating them, make it the ideal laxative.

In the process of manufacturing figs are used, as they are pleasant to the taste, but the medicinal qualities of the remedy are obtained from seeds and other aromatic plants, by a method known to the CALIFORNIA FIG SYRUP CO. only. In order to get its beneficial effects, and to avoid imitations, please remember the full name of the Company printed on the front of every package.

REPUBLICAN HARMONY.

As It Exists in the State of Ohio Among the Houses at the Present Time.

The Chicago Times-Herald, the leading administration organ in the middle west, has been keeping up a running fire of attack upon republican Senator Foraker, of Ohio. Some quotations from the Times-Herald on this subject, the Argus has republished.

Senator Foraker has replied to certain of the attacks as follows:

"My attention has just been called to the editorial in the Times-Herald of last Sunday, entitled: 'Now, Let's Hear the Facts.' It is made up of charges and insinuations that are but a tissue of falsehoods from beginning to end, without any basis of excuse whatever, and you know that they were such when you published them. I respectfully ask that you print this as publicly as you did the editorial to which it has reference."

The Chicago Times-Herald prints the above, and comments upon it as follows:

"Among the charges and insinuations Senator Foraker characterizes as a tissue of falsehoods from beginning to end was the statement of his connection with the ballot box forgery. This matter received official investigation in Washington in January, 1890. It was proved that this same Senator Foraker, then governor of Ohio, entered into a conspiracy with one Richard G. Wood of the Hall & Wood Ballot Box Co., for the purpose of attacking the names of certain prominent Ohioans, including Gov. Campbell, Ben Butterworth, William McKinley and others, to a contract which was to be made as a bribe against Campbell and also to discredit the others."

"Foraker's plot miscarried, because the forged signatures were accepted as genuine and the truth had to come out to save its author from more desperate consequences."

"Before being dismissed from the stand Wood said: 'Gov. Foraker doesn't dare ask me any questions. I have not told half what I know yet. I am holding back my best points for cross-examination, and he knows it.'"

"If there is a single prominent man in Ohio who does not cherish a painful memory of faith betrayed and friendship abused by Joseph R. Foraker, from John Sherman down to Mayor McKisson, the Times-Herald would like to print his 'name in capitals.'"

ALGER HAS HEDGED.

He Has Given Governor Wingree a Thrown-Down on the Senatorial Scheme.

Alger has fooled Pingree. In the language of the race track, the unresigned secretary has hedged.

In his last unassuming, which was made to New York reporters, he assures the public that he never had any idea of forming an alliance with Gov. Pingree. The latter, he declares, to his surprise called upon him during a recent visit to Michigan and persisted in forcing upon him, as it were, a senatorial boom. Alger admits the soft impeachment that he accepted the boom, but says that in doing so he made no alliance either offensive or defensive with Pingree.

This presentation of the case does not accord with Alger's interview given to the Chicago reporters several days ago, just after he came from his conference with Pingree. Then he acknowledged that he had joined hands with the potatos statesman for the purpose of defeating Mr. McMillan for the Michigan senatorship and securing the toga for his own shoulders.

He even admitted that he would make his light on a platform declaring hostility to the trusts and favoring the election of senators by direct popular vote. He did not deny Pingree on that occasion, or mention that he had ever opposed his potatoship for governor. But he did deny that he was ever a member of the Diamond Match trust, which denial has since been refuted by Alger's own testimony taken from the records of a court in which that trust was a litigant.

Alger's New York interview will hardly impress the public as being the whole truth. He has got himself into a fix trying to carry water on both shoulders and is trying to prevaricate out of it. There are fat pickings in the two years' lease that remain to him of the war department control. He does not care to lose them. He has concluded that the secretaryship bird in the hand is worth more than the Michigan senatorship in the bush.

CAN'T LOSE ALGY.

ALGER—No, Pingree, there can be no alliance between us after all. I can't desert the administration.

"And the blood almost killed father."

butions to republican harmony, in Ohio, are published interviews with Mark Hanna, attacking republican Mayor Jones, of Toledo, and interviews with Jones, attacking Hanna.

Says Hanna of Jones: "He is simply a crank," "a disappointed candidate for governor," "the real workingsmen are not with him," "he is backed by the rift-ruff and the idle fellows you meet in every city—the liquor dealers and bums were for him."

Says Jones of Hanna: "He is an intolerant tyrant and insufferable boss," "his reference to me and my ambition respecting the governorship and my connection with the labor convention in Columbus is a tissue of lies, which I charitably charge to his leading characteristic, his colossal ignorance. If we have reached a period of the history of the great state of Ohio when a boss like this can subvert the will of the people, as he did at the Columbus convention, then indeed may the people despair, for their cause is desperate."

Republican harmony in Ohio, which lately was able to sit up, take nourishment and recognize folks, has evidently had a relapse, and the worst is to be feared.—Albany Argus.

Trusts Own the Republican Party.

The pretense that there can be no issue between the two great parties on the subject of trusts if the republicans denounce them in their national platform next year is an affront to ordinary common sense. It is very doubtful, in the first place, whether or not the trusts will permit the republican party to denounce them in its platform. If they do it will be under an agreement with the party managers that the declaration is for campaign purposes only and that it is to be disregarded after election, just as the civil service reform resolution made at St. Louis in 1896 has been. The organized wealth of the country—that is to say, the trusts—owns the republican organization. It makes its platform, it names its candidates, it dictates its policy. In 1896 it refused to permit the question of trusts to be mentioned in the St. Louis platform. In 1898 it would not allow an allusion to them to appear in the Indiana platform. It nominated William McKinley for president.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

The main obstacles to President McKinley's success in the battle for reelection are chiefly or wholly of his own creation. True, he is not the author of them, but they could have had no existence but for his tolerance, and, therefore, he stands before the country fairly responsible for them. He has allowed the mean jealousies of others to environ his administration with stammering blocks which now make his defeat in a contest for reelection more than possible. Let McKinley clear his decks.—Philadelphia Times.

SPECKS IN BUTTER.

Carelessness Is the Cause of Them in Most Cases, Faulty Working and Setting in the Rest.

The cause of specks or mottles in butter is not always an easy matter to find out, for there are several things which may be held accountable for it. Everyone knows mottled butter when they see it, for it contains light spots and streaks. Carelessness on the part of the butter maker is the cause in nine out of ten cases, but even the most careful person will sometimes get a batch of streaky goods. Probably the majority of cases can be traced to the manner of salting and working. If a coarse kind of salt is used it does not dissolve rapidly and eventually brings out the color more deeply in spots, for it is well known that salt deepens the color in butter. Likewise a poor quality of salt containing lime will bring out the color unevenly. Failure to work the butter evenly. It is a good plan to work butter twice, letting it stand for two hours or so after the first working. Mottled butter is often caused by failure to maintain a uniform temperature, either of the cream before churning, or of the butter afterward while salting and working it. If part of the butter gets too hard or too dry it will not dissolve as much salt as the rest of it.

If some of the butter globules in the cream are heated too much above the cooled too far below the rest they will not take color and salt uniformly with the others. Poor butter color will also cause it, as well as improper handling of the milk or ripening of the cream. It would seem, therefore, that the way to avoid streaky butter is to follow carefully the most approved methods of handling the milk and cream, to keep as uniform a temperature as possible in ripening the cream, to use the best kinds of butter color and salt, and finally to thoroughly work the butter or better still to rework it before making up. But above all these rules must be placed experience and knowledge.—Irairie Farmer.

MEANING OF STATE NAMES.

Michigan—Indian, "great lake."

Minnesota—Indian, "cloudy water."

Ohio—The Shawnee for "the beautiful river."

Connecticut—Indian name, "a long river."

Iowa—Indian word meaning "drowsy water."

Kansas—In Indian means "smoky water."

Wisconsin—Indian for "wild and rushing channel."

Alabama—An Indian name, meaning, "Here we rest."

Florida—A Spanish word meaning "blooming" or "flowery."

Kentucky—Indian "rain-tuckee," at the head of the river.

Vermont—From the French "verd mont," green mountain.

California—For an island of the name, where gold was found, in a Spanish romance.

Illinois—From the Indian "Illini," men, and the French adverb, "making" "tribe of men."

Missouri—Name means "muddy water," said in reference to the mudiness of the Missouri river, or for the "Missouris," a tribe of Indians.

STRONG POST PULLER.

With It Two Men Pulled Out Fifty-Two Stubbish Posts in Less Than One Hour.

I had a lot of posts to pull out, and I invented the device shown in sketch—a lever, fulcrum and chain—made of such material as I could find lying around. With this device my hired hand and I pulled out 52 posts in less than an hour. The lever (B) is made out of an old rusty piece of iron, about nine feet long. Fourteen inches from the large end I bored a five-eighths hole for the fulcrum. A hook, shown at 2, was bolted on top end of lever, with two three-eighths bolts, the hook projecting over the end to catch in links of chain. I use an ordinary log chain with hook on end. The fulcrum is made of three pieces spiked together, the center piece two feet eight inches long and thick enough to allow the lever to move easily between the two outside pieces, which are six inches longer, and project above the center piece that much. These outside pieces are one and one-half by four inches. Bore the five-eighths hole through these projecting outside pieces about one and one-half inches from the top. Put in the lever, run a bolt through, and the puller is ready for business. I pulled up some old barn-shed posts with this device that I could not move with two horses and chain. This device is not patented.—S. L. Snyder, in Ohio Farmer.

High-Grade Farm Butter.

Better butter can be made on the farm than at the creamery if the same care is given. The managers of creameries secure the best assistants to be had, and they aim to put good butter on the market. The advantage possessed by the farmer who makes dairy butter is that he can feed his cows on the best foods, use more care and work with cleaner surroundings. A large proportion of creamery butter is not uniform, as the milk comes from many sources, but dairy butter is injured in the churning and manipulation of the product by inexperienced persons.

The Salting of Butter.

Butter taken from the churn in granular form will take the salt more evenly than if gathered into a lump, besides which the milk can be more thoroughly separated. Tastes differ as to the amount of salt, but this is not essential to the keeping qualities of butter; anywhere from one-half ounce or more will keep it if the milk is out of it. For laying down a stone jar is as good as anything; press the layer down as solid as possible, then sprinkle a handful of salt over to keep the next layer from sticking. A cloth may be put between the layers, but it is not essential.

The fetching thing out for very young women in the ecstasy of their first love affair is to have the young man's eye photographed upon the inner case of her watch. In case of the eye being a large, black Spanish one, there is less of the suggestion that the young man has been a victim of a nitroglycerine explosion.—N. Y. Herald.

INVENTED FOR THE CYCLIST.

To prevent bicycle wheels from throwing mud and water on the rider's back a new device is formed of two arms pivoted on the rear axle to support a small roller in a position to take up the mud before it can be thrown off.

For use in discharging puncture-closing compounds into bicycle tires a new receptacle is fitted with a sliding bottom, which is pushed in after the nozzle is attached to the valve, thus forcing the heavy liquid into the tire.

In a new bicycle chain adjustment the hub is carried by a plate sliding in a slot in the rear fork, with a screw bolt headed in one side of the plate and running through a fixed hub on the side of the fork to draw the plate in either direction.

The lower brace on the chain side of a new bicycle frame is used as a gear case, the single tube being replaced by a flat casing, with channels formed at the top and bottom to cover the chain and heads at either end, which surround the sprocket wheels.

In a newly designed bicycle lamp the oil holder is of tubular shape, with clamps to attach it to the lower tube of the frame, just back of the head, the wick tube extending out at right angles to carry the burner and reflector, which can be tilted at any desired angle.

An improved automatic bicycle pump is clamped directly to the center of the hub, with a lever at one end which engages an adjustable screw at every revolution of the wheel to operate a piston and force the air into the tire, the head of the screw being within reach of the rider without dismounting.

Elasticity of English.

Where does the slang of the day originate? When a new verbal monstrosity comes into currency its origin is as mysterious as its effect is startling. On a roof garden last night a weary-looking youth in a straw hat that had seen better days and with telltale puffs beneath his eyes, released two straws from his mouth long enough to remark, languidly, that he was suffering from a horrible case of the "ding-bats." His companion who looked like a vaudeville lady, had just remarked in a tone loud enough to be heard by her neighbors, that one of the performers was "a useless bunch of trousers." One meant that his head ached, the other that the object of her criticism was professionally incompetent. It's a great language.—N. Y. Commercial Advertiser.
